Text of Blast Call Notification to all resident families and employees via VoiceFriend.

Hello. It's Bill Bogdanovich, from Broad Reach.

Reopening things seems to be on everybody's mind these days. In the worlds we share, the questions of when and how our residents will again have visitors seems more important than whether Major League Baseball figures out whether it's going to have a season.

The federal government has published guidance to the states about various aspects of our reopening. I've published that document on the COVID-19 information link of our website if you want to dive into it. What happens next is that the state Department of Public Health needs to digest it and put its version forward to us, and we know that effort is underway.

Access into Liberty Commons and The Victorian doesn't seem to be on the immediate horizon, and other communal activities aren't either, but our thinking is to find other ways to fill some of those voids.

Over the course of a few afternoons next week, families will be invited to be part of some drive by parades. We're going to schedule them so that each unit at Liberty Commons and for The Victorian serve as "hosts". Residents, socially distant and wearing masks will be outside in our parking lots and driveways, accompanied 1:1 by staff members. Families of residents from that unit will assemble in the Chatham Works parking lot up the street, and we'll facilitate a parade through our properties offering everyone a chance to see each other in-person that's not been possible for so long.

It's got to be strictly controlled. Everyone must remain in their cars. We will be in touch further with specific days and times once we see how the weather looks.

A few other key reporting statistics include that all COVID-19 tests back on staff and residents have been negative this week.
